PREFACE

Each year since 1971, the Office of Economic Opportunity has published a directory of Senior Opportunities and Services (SOS) programs.

SOS activities are of considerable interest to the Senate Special Committee on Aging, which in 1965 and 1966 conducted extensive hearings on "The War on Poverty as It Affects the Elderly." In a subsequent report, the Committee made strong recommendations for OEO service programs on behalf of low-income older Americans. As a result, SOS was born in 1967. It encouraged establishment of local projects designed to serve the elderly poor. Specific program objectives included development of new employment, volunteer, and referral services; establishment of additional services and programs to remedy gaps and deficiencies in existing programs, and modification of program structures to facilitate the greater use of existing public services by the elderly poor.

In recent years, SOS programs have been used more and more to underpin more comprehensive senior programs supported in large part by the U.S. Administration on Aging.

Throughout its existence, SOS has been innovative and often pioneering, meeting local needs in tailor-made ways. The lessons to be learned from SOS are many. In a period of transition, there should be no abrupt interruption of its many services.

That transition began when the Congress, in Public Law 93-644 (1974), suspended OEO and authorized establishment of the Community Services Administration.

SOS functions, along with other selected OEO activities, will now be administered through CSA. President Ford may make proposals for additional reorganization at a later time, and any such proposals will receive careful Congressional consideration.

In any case, the good work done by SOS should not be overlooked or usurped.

For that reason, it is more important than ever that the Congress, the Executive Branch, and the general public have fullest possible access to information about SOS. Therefore, when it appeared late in 1974 that the OEO would be unable to publish its annual SOS program directory, the Committee on Aging expressed concern and offered to consider publication of the directory. With the help of OEO Director, Mr. Bert Gallegos, Acting Deputy Assistant Director for Operations, Jack H. Ramsey, and the Chief of the Office of Older Persons Programs, John Hutchinson, and his staff assistant, Mildred Zaker, the Committee now offers that directory in this publication.

In doing so, we reiterate our determination that every possible source of experience and achievement shall be mobilized to reach one of the fundamental goals of the Senate Special Committee on Aging: development of a comprehensive service delivery system for older Americans, rooted in community need and community planning and given Federal encouragement and assistance when needed and when harmonious with local goals.

FRANK CHURCH,

Chairman, Special Committee on Aging.

EDWARD M. KENNEDY,

Chairman, Subcommittee on Federal, State and Community Affairs.

Part I

INTRODUCTION

The 1973 Directory of Senior Opportunities and Services Programs is based upon results of a third national survey of Office of Economic Opportunity Community Action Agencies.

This directory is designed to serve several purposes:

- It reflects the variety and breadth of locally designed programs;
- It sets forth the special needs, conditions and basic criteria to be met for developing and funding older persons programs;
- It reports to the President and the Congress on how OEO has expended its SOS "special" funds for elderly; and
- It makes readily available data on types of programs, funding levels and specific program services

The directory, published each year since 1971, identifies and quantifies OEO's elderly programs and is presented in a nontechnical style and format. We hope the directory will provide greater understanding of OEO's Older Persons Programs and policies and will stimulate state and community interest in the development of new programs to serve the low-income elderly. Additionally, it is hoped that you will find it useful as a source of programmatic ideas.

Part 2

SOS PROGRAM - POLICY AND SCOPE

The Senior Opportunities and Services program (SOS), first authorized by the Economic Opportunity Act in 1967, is designed to identify and meet the special needs of the elderly poor. Local projects, which are operated primarily through CAAs, must meet four basic criteria: First, they must serve and/or employ persons over age 60 as the exclusive or predominant participant or employee group. Second, existing services must be utilized to the maximum extent possible to avoid duplication. Third, SOS projects must provide opportunity for elderly poor to develop, direct and administer programs for their benefit. Fourth, the projects must deal with specific problems of the low-income elderly that cannot be met practically by more general programs designed to serve multi-generational groups.

Specific program objectives include development of new employment, volunteer and referral services, creation of additional services and programs to remedy gaps and deficiencies in existing programs, and modification of eligibility requirements and program structures to facilitate the greater use of existing public services by the elderly poor.

In coordination with Federal Regional Councils, several small grants were made in FY 1973, sometimes jointly funded by other agencies, to effect and facilitate federations of all senior groups within cities, counties and entire states as forums for discussing policy issues affecting the interests of older persons and communicating their recommendations in a forceful and responsible manner to legislators and other policy makers. As a result of this emerging coalescence of numerous older persons clubs and organizations into large influential groups representing and speaking for the elderly as a single force, many significant changes have occurred which in the aggregate represent benefits for the elderly which multiply many times over the investment in SOS programs.

Since the 1971 White House Conference on Aging, far-reaching changes in national priorities and resource allocations for the elderly have occurred which had a decisive impact on the structure and emphases of SOS projects.

Increasingly SOS and Community Action local initiative are being used to provide the planning, community organization and outreach nucleus to underpin more comprehensive senior programs whose major support comes from the Administration of Aging's Nutrition Program for the Elderly, Title III social service programs, general revenue sharing and other sources. The strategy of OEO is to encourage the use of OEO fundings to complement and assist the Older Americans Act programs and other federal agency programs by contributing those services in which Older Persons Programs and CAAs generally have acquired specialized expertise such as outreach to the isolated elderly, involvement of the elderly in program planning and operation and the maximum employment of low-income elderly in program staff positions.

PURPOSE

This instruction is a guide for professional staff and lay citizens at the community level on how an emphasis for the elderly poor as mandated by the Economic Opportunity Act can be accomplished through programs serving all ages, such as community action agencies, neighborhood legal services and comprehensive health programs and through programs serving only the aged funded out of Senior Opportunities and Services, local initiative money of CAAs or research and demonstration projects.

APPLICABILITY

Financial assistance made under Sections 221, 222(a) (7), (3), (4), (5), (8), (9) and 232 of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 as amended is such assistance is administered by OEO.

REFERENCE

Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 as amended; OEO Instruction 6005-1: Participation of the Poor in the Planning, Conduct and Evaluation of Community Action Programs; OEO Instruction 6015-2: Report on Study of Involvement of the Private Sector; OEO Instruction 7850-1: Standards for Evaluating the Effectiveness of Community Action Programs.

BACKGROUND

1. The Special Poverty of the Elderly

Older Americans constitute a natural resource rich with the wisdom of life experience. They are a living repository of the history and culture of a neighborhood, a community, a region or a family. They possess skills and insights that can be of great value to business and industry, to civic groups, to government, to individuals and to families. Their average life span and their total numbers have increased in the last ten years. Many are in excellent physical and mental health.

But nearly five million Americans aged 65 and over live in poverty. They make up one-fourth of all elderly Americans and one-fifth of all the poor. They share with the other poor the problems of inadequate income and limited opportunity, but they also suffer from such particular disadvantages of old age as:

Chronic Illness The normal and natural physical decline of aging obviously makes health care a much larger financial problem for the old than for the young. The creation of such health payment programs as Medicare and Medicaid has been of considerable aid in crisis illness but chronic care with its requirements for varying levels of service and facilities remains a pressing national problem.

Isolation Poor health is often a factor in the immobility of the elderly. They may be no longer physically able to drive if they still can afford a car. Public transportation does not meet their needs for special vehicles and scheduling. Often they are lonely, isolated from a society that stresses youth and has seemingly released adult children from responsibility for their dependent parents. Many contemporaries of the older poor have died or moved away from the declining, old city neighborhoods and rural communities where the elderly often reside.

Lack of Access to Benefits and Services The isolation and immobility of the elderly poor often result in their not receiving those aids which government and voluntary social welfare groups provide. Often they do not even benefit from Social Security and pension plans, to which they have contributed over the years. A growing number of the elderly are "new poor" -- dependent on fixed incomes despite increasing expenses. Many do not know where help can be obtained. After being self-sufficient all their lives, elderly individuals are often too proud to ask for help. And the very existence and complexity of benefits and services often create barriers to the receipt of them.

2. OEO Focus on Elderly Poor

The original Economic Opportunity Act passed in 1964 did not specify priorities among sub-groups in the poverty population. In 1967, the Congress called for increased and special attention to a minority group of the poor whose ranks were increasing -- persons over the age of 55. While a Federal strategy of more income for the elderly was and is being pursued, it does not always make available necessary services.

Congress, in the 1967 amendments to the Economic Opportunity Act,

- (1) declared that "whenever feasible the special problems of the elderly poor shall be considered in the development, conduct, and administration of programs under this Act",
- (2) established "...a program to be known as 'Senior Opportunities and Services' designed to identify and meet the needs of the older, poor persons above the age of 60..."

The Congress further gave the Director of the Office of Economic Opportunity specific responsibilities for the elderly poor in the 1967 amendments. Section 610 calls for the Director to:

- (1) carry out such investigations and studies, including consultations with appropriate agencies and organizations, as may be necessary to develop and carry out a plan for the participation of the elderly poor in programs under this Act, including programs providing employment opportunities, public service opportunities, education and other services and activities which assist the elderly poor to achieve self-sufficiency.
- (2) maintain a constant review of all programs under this Act to assure that the needs of the elderly poor are given adequate consideration...

PROGRAMS SERVING ALL AGES

1. Community Action Agencies

The guidelines for Senior Opportunities and Services which follow provide details of how these specific programs should operate. They provide guidance for use of local initiative money as well as for earmarked SOS funds.

Since the elderly constitute such a large minority of the poor they should be well represented on boards, as staff and volunteers, and in programming and all other aspects of multi-generational CAA activity such as housing, manpower, consumer education and neighborhood service centers.

In setting the basic components of community action agencies, including Indian and migrant programs, Section 221 of the EOA specifically identified the involvement of the aged. The legislation calls for "...activities and supporting facilities designed to assist participants including the elderly poor."

2. Comprehensive Health Services and Legal Services

These specialized services attempt to reach all ages of the poor through neighborhood delivery mechanisms. However, the unique needs of the elderly have not always been met. In many instances these needs can be met by special training or staff assignment to an elderly component within a multi-generational program. Where there is a heavy concentration of the elderly poor, such as in a senior housing complex, OEO's neighborhood delivery unit might well focus on serving that group in more visible ways that give special attention to their needs and condition as part of the comprehensive program.

Where SOS programs and other programs serving the elderly poor exist, OEO-funded legal and health programs should develop working relationships in such matters as: planning, service coordination, staff training, outreach and referral.

3. Research and Pilot Programs

Section 232 of the EOA clearly directs OEO "...to develop and carry out pilot projects which aid elderly persons to achieve greater self-sufficiency." OEO headquarters has primary responsibility for initiating research and demonstration efforts to accomplish this objective in coordination with regional, state and local OEO-funded units.

SENIOR OPPORTUNITIES AND SERVICES

1. Policy

The 1967 amendments to the Economic Opportunity Act clearly spell out the way in which funds earmarked by the Congress for Senior Opportunities and Services programs should be used to identify and meet the needs of poor persons above the age of 60. As detailed in Section 222 (a) (7), SOS emphases should be:

- *Development and provision of new employment and volunteer services.
- *Effective referral to existing health, welfare, employment, housing, legal, consumer, transportation, education, recreational and other services.
- *Stimulation and creation of additional services and programs to remedy gaps and deficiencies in presently existing services and programs.
- *Modification of existing procedures, eligibility requirements and program structures to facilitate the greater use of, and participation in, public services by the older poor.
- *Development of all-season recreation and service centers controlled by older persons.

The legislation further states that the Director of the Office of Economic Opportunity in the administration of SOS programs should utilize the services of the Administration on Aging in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to the maximum extent possible. These services can and do include funds and technical guidance including numerous manuals, case models and research reports.

2. Program Guidelines

a. SOS Planning

All proposals for SOS funding should be preceded by and be based upon the results of intensive community planning. Since the characteristics, needs and resources of every community differ, the best program for any given community can be determined only by a careful survey of the numbers and needs of the older poor and an inventory of available resources. This should be followed by the establishment of short and long-range goals by staff, intended elderly beneficiaries and other persons interested in or responsible for older persons programs.

The Administration on Aging has recently issued a survey manual, * Social Indicators for the Aged, which can be a useful tool in determining quantitatively and qualitatively the needs of the elderly. Copies can be obtained through the State Commissions on Aging. Contact with COA's should be made in any event to draw on their data on the elderly as well as to have their advice and consultation on the SOS proposal. The monograph produced by the National Council on the Aging for OEO on "Community Organization, Planning and Resources and the Older Poor" is also a must.

Planning for the aged should be an integral part of the annual planning process in which every CAA engages as a prerequisite to qualifying for OEO support. The results of this process are recorded on CAP Form 81 (Section III, OEO Instruction 6710-1 "Applying for a CAP Grant).

The sponsor should make an effort to explore other sources of funding for part or all of the proposed programs. The prospective sponsor should seek the assistance of the State or local Commission on Aging, as well as the regional OEO Aging Coordinator. In addition, sponsors should utilize the OEO pamphlet 6172-1, * "Resources for the Aging -- An Action Handbook."

All SOS program applications should show specific evidence of coordination and consultation with community agencies and services concerned with older persons as well as those for all age groups. However, nothing in this section should be interpreted to mean that SOS programs are to lose their identity as older, low-income persons' programs mobilizing the talents and energies of the community's older low-income persons, under direction of an older, low-income persons advisory group, and dramatizing and meeting the needs of the community's elderly poor. (Reference: OEO Guidance 6011-2, Report on Study of Involvement of the Private Sector.)

* OUT OF PRINT

Programs should be designed to recognize varying degrees of dependence and independence among the older population. Older persons are as varied in their strengths and weaknesses, needs and abilities, likes and dislikes as persons in any other grouping. Efforts should be taken to avoid concentrating on younger persons in the aging group (such as 55 to 60) who have the greatest "payoff" in such measurable terms as employment.

b. Program Coordination

Each SOS project shall have a direct relationship with all other CAA and community services and activities which might be utilized by the elderly.

While it is recognized that such groups may not have shown interest in the poor or the aged in the past, they might be utilized to strengthen the proposed SOS program with resources and assistance. Thus a senior center which previously provided service primarily to higher income participants may wish to join an SOS program and could provide space and equipment as the local share for a grant. Similar involvement might be sought from recreational groups, church societies, ethnic social groups comprised of primarily older adult membership, etc. City health departments which might regularly provide treatment or diagnostic services for older persons may be willing to extend free physical examinations to SOS participants.

Older persons membership groups, whatever the income level of their membership, should be solicited to participate in program design or conduct. Such groups may be an excellent source for staff recruitment and for the basis of community organization work. Older persons membership groups comprised of low-income persons should be sought especially to play a role in the conduct of the proposed program. As noted below, such groups could become delegate agencies or direct sponsors of SOS program components.

Churches, especially in rural areas, can have a special role in SOS programs. Church-related groups and activities have demonstrated the only interest in the elderly in many communities. In many rural areas, churches are not only an excellent resource for senior center locations, but are often the only available site for activities and can be a major source of volunteers and community support for SOS ventures.

While SOS programs are designed to deal with the special poverty-related problems of older persons, they cannot attempt to assume responsibility for all the activity on behalf of older low-income persons within the community. In fact, it is a major objective of SOS programs to develop mechanisms for more effective involvement of older low-income persons in all community action programs as well as in related, anti-poverty programs.

Wherever possible and feasible, OEO programs should serve as the catalyst for permanent organizations of senior citizens independent of the OEO-funded program. Middle-class senior citizens have organized in astounding numbers in the past several years and their "senior power" has resulted in tangible benefits. Involvement in SOS programs, itself, can be the leadership training needed by the elderly poor to assume necessary organizational roles.

Regular staff communication between the SOS program and other program activities should be maintained to assure full service coverage as well as to avoid duplication. Periodic assessments should be made of the feasibility of incorporating the experience gained from the special SOS program into other CAA program operations.

A similar effort should be made to incorporate the experience of the SOS program into Model Cities planning and programming to assure full participation of, and equity for, older persons in such new programs.

Because SOS funds are limited and also because of the pressing need of older persons for employment assistance, each SOS project application should show specific coordination with existing community Title I, Title III and other manpower programs.

c. SOS Sponsorship

The presumptive sponsors for SOS programs are community action agencies and directly related anti-poverty agencies such as CAA-funded neighborhood groups, Neighborhood Services Programs (NSP), Concentrated Employment Programs (CEP), etc. Other agencies and groups which have a special interest in and a history of involvement with other low-income persons may act as delegate agencies of the CAA and, in those circumstances where the CAA cannot or will not sponsor older persons programs, such agencies and groups may directly sponsor programs.

d. Program Participants

SOS programs should utilize guidelines issued by OEO for all Title II programs. However, just as poverty cannot be defined by strict income levels for all ages, it is a particular categorization problem for the elderly. Frequently, they own a home which keeps them out of a strict "poverty" definition but whose upkeep is a burden they can no longer manage with their limited liquid cash.

Moreover, in some communities SOS offers needed services which are not available from any other source. In addition to serving these service-poor elderly, a small percentage of persons below the age of 60 who would otherwise qualify for SOS programs should also be accommodated.

e. Policy Board

SOS programs will require the development of separate boards for the conduct of SOS components.

Each project shall have a board composed of a majority of democratically selected older poor persons. Other members of the board may be individuals who have a history of advocacy for older low-income persons, persons representing other CAA programs, and representatives of public and private agencies.

The board shall advise the grantee in planning and evaluating programs, developing policy for program administration, determining standards of eligibility for participation (within the limits established by OEO regulations), selection of the project staff director or supervisor, mobilization of resources, and serving as a two-way channel of ideas between the community and the grantee.

f. Program Staff

Priority shall be given to employing older persons in all phases of SOS programs because of the Congressional intent in the SOS amendments and because of the demonstrated effectiveness of older persons in directing and operating programs which serve and work with the elderly.

There is no single definition of the older poor as program workers. Many older potential staff workers will have wide experience and precise job qualifications. Other persons may not have specific qualifications but could, if adequately trained, be of service in a variety of roles, particularly in the outreach aspect of the program. In many circumstances only an older neighborhood worker can gain the confidence and cooperation of an isolated and fearful older person.

Younger persons on the staff can play a useful and even crucial role in many programs. They may be able to do jobs which are physically taxing to many older persons. More importantly, younger staff persons may be able to communicate with other community anti-poverty groups engaged in programs of importance to the older persons.

In short, SOS programs should utilize the talents and qualities of the elderly in all possible cases, but should not segregate them in program staffing policies from other age and interest groups in the community equally dedicated to fighting poverty.

The Concentrated Employment Program (CEP) and other manpower programs can provide some of the SOS manpower needs through the allocation of "Mainstream" or "new careers" slots. In addition, Neighborhood Youth Corps enrollees could be utilized in SOS programs in a variety of roles. The training resources of the local CEP or other manpower programs should be utilized in the training of SOS staff.

g. Program Volunteers

Volunteer workers supplement the paid staff of many SOS projects and, in fact, some programs depend almost wholly on volunteers for their manpower needs. Such local involvement increases the amount of political and monetary support in a community for older persons and other anti-poverty programs.

Sources of volunteers often exist among the participants of SOS programs themselves and in various community service and church organizations. Most cities of substantial size have volunteer workers for many types of service. Through the newly-established National Center for Voluntary Action, "voluntary action centers" are being established in many cities. These are often based in and expand on the work of volunteer bureaus.

A more formalized source of volunteer workers is emerging in the new Federal ACTION agency which combines VISTA, the Peace Corps, the Retired Senior Volunteer Program and the Foster Grandparents program. This agency under certain circumstances can provide volunteers on a regular part or full time basis and pay their transportation and subsistence costs.

The successful use of volunteers in any program requires sound planning and scheduling and skillful direction. Unless the SOS project staff has experience on the use of volunteers, it is an area in which advice and training should be sought from OEO's training and technical assistance contractor, a local volunteer bureau or other qualified resource.

3. Program Models

The following program descriptions are presented as suggestions and constitute the kinds of SOS programs which will have priority in OEO funding decisions.

a. Referral Service

The SOS legislation clearly calls for "...effective referral to existing health, welfare, employment, housing, legal, consumer, transportation, education, and recreational and other services."

Effective is the key word. Before the elderly poor can be referred, they must be reached. All too often this means overcoming the barriers of physical and psychological isolation which society or the aged individual erects. Even after information is provided to the older person, a "follow-through" effort is called for by the SOS programs and its workers to make sure that the eligible recipient gets through all the bureaucracy.

That is often not enough. Congress recognized this when it further described the function of SOS programs as:

"...modification of existing procedures, eligibility requirements and program structures to facilitate the greater use of, and participation in, public services by the older poor."

"...stimulation and creation of additional services and programs to remedy gaps and deficiencies in presently existing services and programs."

Project FIND (Friendless, Isolated, Needy, Disabled) is a unique model of service referral which embodies several of the mandated goals of Senior Opportunities and Services. Developed and tested for OEO by the National Council on the Aging, its major components are:

1. Seek out the aged and then provide information, assistance, and referrals.
2. Intervene, when necessary, to see that individuals get the service they need from the appropriate agency.
3. Involve the elderly in such social action and self-help programs as will lend group strength and support to the individuals and maximize their capacities to deal with some of their problems.
4. Recommend and document the need for new, unavailable services.

All referral services should utilize older persons as paid staff and volunteers wherever and whenever feasible. This kind of program can be implemented as a program element of a community action agency. For example, it may be used to reach out to the aged from a Neighborhood Opportunity Center, a CAA-operated senior center or other appropriate elements of the anti-poverty program.

There should be close coordination, and joint sponsorship where feasible, with two agencies found in most communities: Information and Referral centers and public welfare. "I&R" centers provide service to clients of all ages about the wide range of health and welfare services. They are usually sponsored by Health and Welfare Councils and funded by United Funds. Some "I&R's" have highly developed sections on services for the aged which are being funded by the Administration on Aging. The AOA has useful guidance material for setting up an "I&R" program including information on how to develop a resource file, train staff and volunteers, and establish referral procedures.

The public welfare or public social services agency is frequently a resource to which the elderly poor are referred for a number of benefits and services beginning with Old Age Assistance and Medicaid. There are also a variety of services for the aged regardless of eligibility for OAA which can be provided where state government elects to do so including information and referral. Cooperation with an SOS program could be in the form of the public welfare agency contracting with SOS for information and referral services.

b. Senior Opportunity Centers

As authorized by Congress, OEO's Senior Opportunity Centers are "all season recreation and service centers controlled by older persons." They serve as the focal point for a broad set of community programs, services and activities serving older low-income persons. These centers are not intended to be program extensions of CAAs multi-purpose and multi-generational neighborhood center programs.

Control by the elderly poor participants of the programs and activities of the center is essential. Such control should be accomplished through broadly-representative and democratically operated boards and committees. A predominance of the center's staff should be older persons with low incomes.

Most of the programs conducted in, or through, the centers should be directly concerned with the problems of poverty, such as employment, health, consumer action and housing. Each of the centers should be directly related to the other community anti-poverty programs and should, insofar as possible, incorporate such programs into the center activities as a direct service of the center. For instance, an OEO Legal Service representative could make regular visits to the SOS center to handle potential legal cases. Centers should also utilize space and equipment available through existing CAA or other community agency neighborhood centers, provided that there is a specific, integral area set aside for the use of older persons on schedules consistent with human and program needs.

Senior Opportunity Centers, as well as referral programs, may initially begin with limited program interests with a concentration on one or two crucial problem areas such as health, employment or housing. However, sponsors should recognize that the poverty problems of older persons, as of other poverty groups, are often closely interrelated and cannot be neatly separated. Single or limited problem program designs should contain the flexibility to meet related needs as they are discovered. More broadly based programs, attempting to meet a wide variety of problems of older persons, should be designed to be able to shift program emphasis to meet specific pressing needs if necessary.

SOS centers should be located in areas with heavy residential concentrations of older, low-income persons. They should provide assistance to existing and newly created organizations of older, low-income individuals for activities within the confines of the center as well as outside it.

In addition to providing services and other activities, a Senior Opportunity Center can become the major community and/or neighborhood source of information and referral on the needs of the elderly poor. It might also be the focal point for the organization of older persons into issue-related groups which might affect community decisions crucial to the needs of the older poor such as rent control, consumer action, property tax relief and reduced public transportation rates.

c. Individual Program Components

Within the framework of a "Referral Service" or "Senior Opportunity Center," the following program components have been developed by a number of SOS projects.

1. Health

Health Referral Programs. Despite the impact of Medicare and Medicaid, a vast number of older, poor persons still lack services. Local programs could hire older persons as health aides; reach out to older persons with health problems; assure follow through of care and services. A major objective of such programs might be modifications in public health services procedures to assure better utilization of that system by the elderly -- such as replacing long waits in line with an appointment system. In addition, such programs could provide transportation for patients and could, in limited cases, purchase medical implements such as hearing aids and glasses not provided by other public or private health services.

Homemaker and Health Aide Programs. After an initial SOS funding, such programs could become self-financing through Medicare reimbursements under existing Federal and local regulations. Home health programs can offer varying levels of health services from the visiting service with modest health-related assistance to visiting nurse programs providing therapy and direct health care. In most OEO regions the conduct of the experimental Home Health Aide program has provided some guidance on the design of such programs. As an adjunct of these programs, it may be desirable to develop a group drug-buying service to ease medical expenses.

Rural Health Programs. In many rural areas it may be desirable to develop mobile health clinics to serve otherwise isolated persons. Such programs could be linked with home health services together with a system of direct referral to hospitals and nursing homes for further or specialized treatment. These programs should utilize the resources of the existing local public health system and the Public Health Service of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

Food and Nutrition Programs. Many SOS programs include feeding and nutritional education components to combat inadequate nutrition, which is a primary cause of impaired physical and mental health, and to provide socialization opportunities for lonely older citizens. The nature and extent of such nutritional services vary with the characteristics of the community, the particular needs of the clientele and the resources available.

"Meals on Wheels" projects to bring at least one nutritious meal a day to shut-ins, school lunch facilities used during off-hours to prepare and serve meals to older persons and various adaptations and combinations of these ideas are among the programs in operation. In some instances, the food and nutrition elements of SOS programs have qualified for funding under OEO's Emergency Food and Medical Services Program.

2. Housing Programs

Rural Home Repair Program. Although many older persons in rural areas are home owners, their housing is often substandard. They cannot pay for the simple repairs which they are unable to make themselves. A SOS home repair program might be developed to secure "brick and mortar" monies through Social Security Section 1119 grants, Farmers Home Administration Title V loans, and other credit resources and to utilize the manpower available through Mainstream, Neighborhood Youth Corps, CEP, etc.

In the conduct of such a program, the CAA or a delegate agency would select the homes to be repaired, assist the low-income older owner to secure a loan (or welfare grant), supervise the Mainstream, NYC, etc., crews, purchase specialized tools and equipment and provide other services to the older persons as needed (temporary relocations, etc.). Repair programs should also explore the possibility of stimulating the creation of permanent new housing for low-income older persons through local housing authorities or through Farmers Home Administration and the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) programs.

Supportive Housing Services. Public housing complexes with heavy concentrations of low-income older persons and low-income senior citizens housing developments often have no supportive services to assist the older person in normal necessary activities. Such services might include guards, consumer purchasing services, transportation, landscaping, community organization, employment referrals, etc. Services could be provided by the lower-income older tenants themselves and should be designed both to make life within the housing complex better for the tenant as well as to provide links to outside services and activities for the older poor.

Housing Relocation Services. In many communities, the chief victims of urban renewal and "downtown" development projects are the aged residents. The drab roominghouse districts in which many single older persons live are often the first targets of the demolition crews. Housing relocation assistance is most often inadequate and in other instances oriented toward family groups. SOS programs could be developed to meet this problem through:

- a. surveys of the needs of older persons in relocation areas,
 - b. assistance in locating new housing,
 - c. utilization of such programs as leased housing,
 - d. development of Older Persons Housing Committees to press for better public housing and relocation policies affecting older persons.
 - e. stimulation of more or better older persons public housing programs in the community.
3. Employment Programs

Older persons face stiff discriminatory practices in the labor market. Many older persons can perform on a par with younger persons in a wide variety of full-time jobs if given the chance. However, recruitment, counseling, training and placement practices tend to discriminate on behalf of younger workers. Even community and government training and placement programs display bias against older persons as potential workers.

The older worker often has problems, training needs, talents, and limitations which a youth-oriented program cannot handle without special provisions. Older workers may desire full, part-time or short-term employment. CEP and other manpower programs should have special provisions for the enrollment, training and placement of older workers.

Direct referral programs may be developed if their operation provides adequately paid work which utilizes the skills of the elderly. Generally, programs which specialize in such areas as babysitting are not fundable unless such programs can demonstrate clear training and upgrading features which will lead to improved pay and job positions.

In many communities such organizations as the National Council of Jewish Women and the General Federation of Women's Clubs are conducting modest part-time job referral programs which might be upgraded through a SOS grant.

4. Consumer Programs

Older persons display some distinctive consumer patterns. Their food purchases tend to be small and immediately consumed because of lack of money, lack of cooking or storage facilities and need limited to one or two persons. Many older persons spend a large proportion of their available cash on drugs, which are not covered by Medicare. Transportation use is limited and is often restricted to daytime. Older persons are often the victims of quack medical implement schemes and home repair and improvement swindles.

Specialized consumer action programs to account for the different needs of older persons are therefore important. High in priority in this area are drug-buying cooperatives, food-buying cooperatives, family budgeting information, consumer protection services, emergency loans, etc. It may be desirable to develop special "Senior Opportunity Consumer" components within large, community-wide consumer programs to meet the special needs of the elderly while obtaining the benefits of broader-based efforts.

5. Transportation

The absence or high cost of public transportation in most rural areas and many cities contributes to all of the problems of low-income older persons. It prevents or inhibits their access to health and social services, increases their living costs and intensifies their isolation. The provision of a reasonable level of transportation at an acceptable cost is a complex problem whose solution depends upon local circumstances, resources and ingenuity.

6. Socialization

Social isolation is one of the most demoralizing problems faced by many older people. Frequently it is closely related to such other problems as physical disability, mental illness and malnutrition. While aging affects everyone, isolation can trigger some of the more severe problems of old age much earlier than would otherwise be the case.

Nearly all SOS programs respond to this basic human need by providing opportunities for group recreation and social activities. While recreation can rarely be justified as the sole, or even the primary objective of an SOS program, it has proved to be a desirable secondary feature of many programs. Sometimes a well-planned recreation and social program, by drawing old people out of isolation and involving them in a group, can evolve into a more substantive action program.

Many recreation programs provide participants the opportunity to engage in their hobbies in a group setting. This usually involves handicraft work in which many older people have exceptional skills. Frequently these programs lead to the production of marketable items, particularly handicrafts, which may result in income supplements to the individual or the group as well as provide a morale-building sense of creative achievement.

A congregate meals program also has the dual effect of providing both a nutritious meal and needed socialization experience. Many SOS programs include regular "friendly visits" by one or more elders to homebound older persons. Others use daily telephone calls both as a protective measure and as a source of social contact.
